FLORENCE. - - AUGUST 13, 1887

"When the bathing season arrives," remarked a natatorium professor the other day, "we'll hear of the usual maximum of drowning cases, and among them, as usual, a fair share of expert swimmers. The chief reason why good swimmers are so often drowned when they are accidentally thrown into the water is because the shock causes them to lose their presence of mind. of presence of mind leads to paralysis of body, or to such wild exertions as accelerate drowning instead of contributing to preservation. The ability to behave wisely n case of sudden accidents can only be acquired by experience, just as every-thing else has to be acquired. The theory of the matter can be taught in swimming schools, but the practice must be acquired by experience. Hence, in some of the European swimming schools, the pupils are taken out boat riding and purposely upset, as though the upsetting were ac-cidental. They are also suddenly pushed overboard and subjected to all manner of prepared accidents, so as to accustom them to acting in emergencies. In this way they learn how to behave in case of real accidents, and are protected against the loss of their presence of mind on occasions of danger on the water. They are also taught to have faith in the sustaining power of the water itself. They get to know that the water will sustain them if they will only render it the least help. A finger laid upon an oar, or the gun-wale of an overturned boat, or a board, or almost any floating substance, will sustain the human body in calm water. Persons who have been properly taught, and have acquired the habit of acting with self-possession in the water when they are upset, do not attempt to climb upon the overturned boat, but simply take hold of it and quietly support them-selves. A boat half filled with water, or completely overturned, will support as many persons as can get their hands upon the gunwale, if they behave quietly. In a case of accident, a person who under-stands and acts in accordance with these facts would stand a better chance of being saved, even if he were a poor swimmer, than an expert swimmer would stand who should lose his presence of mind.—Hebrew Journal.

If teachers will only be induced to give to young scholars the simpler compositions of the best composers when the ambitions children begin to clam'r for "pieces," instead of making them learn one after the other "The Rose Mazourka," or "The Lilac Waltz," or "The Flower Polka" and a dozen others of like character, by nobody knows whom, until the nerves of all the members of the family are quite worn out with the succession of tinkling times (for one cannot call them melodies), it would be a step in the right direction. I made such a suggestion as this to the mother of a pretty, bright little miss of some 12 or 13 summers, who was almost clever enough to hara-mer out the jingles musically, and the mother immediately insisted that she should be given some of Mendelsso exquisite "Songs Without Words." Her teacher, or professor, if you like, replied: "Ah, madame, a year or two nce will be quite time enough for mother, "I wish you would at once give my daughter some of the simple gondolier songs, and thus, by easy stages, take her on to the difficult ones." An un-willing compliance was the outcome of her firmness, and now, the year he wished her wait being but little more than half out, the young pupil executes with deli-cate touch the soft, sweet airs of some half dozen of Mendelssohn overtures, and has developed a decided taste for the better class of music—is now well started on the road to a classical education in music, and the little thing criticises the efforts of her less fortunate companions in the most laughably learned manner, plainly showing her distaste for the waltzes and galo they still finger. If my little story of real life points a moral even to but few its mission on earth will indeed be beneficial to the world at large.—Chicago Herald.

Craze for Stuffed Animals.

Now, why do people, and especially small children, like stuffed animals? Because they are not sufficiently familiar with the living body of the animal to feel any shock on seeing tio dead one. They miss no familiar action, they are ignorant of the proper curves and they think the glass eyes look so harmlessly "alive again." But that is a fault in training. They think them beautiful; they do not see that the colors are dull, faded or ridiculously renovated with dye. Such is their ignormee that they feel as the peasants felt when they saw the good father who had christened the child or calmed the sick standing up in a nice frock looking as good as new. Oh, crass stupor of the senses! bluntness of feeling for the reality of association! It is not the frock which makes the monk, it is not the fur which makes the squirrel, nor the wing nor the glass eye which brings back the song and the rustling of trees and the darting flight in the sunshine. Nothing but being unaccustomed to the form and action of the creature living makes that creature pleasant to us when it is no longer alive.—Belgravia.

Novelist James' Rapid Composition. James T. Fields used to mention the novels of G. P. R. James as examples of rapid composition. When the novelist was in this city he was attended at his hotel every morning by an amanuensis, to whom he dictated page after page while striding up and down the room, rarely hesitating for a word, but speaking as rapidly as the other could write. Mr. Fields once asked this young man if he were not glad when his morning task was finished, to which he replied in the nega-"Mr. James has an exasperating tive. way," said the amanuensis, "of stopping in the middle of a chapter just when one has become intensely interested in the story, and I have to beg him to go on, as I am anxious to know how it will end. Even Poore's rapid dictation was probably not equal to the voluminous novelist's ready flow of words, -Boston Globe.
